

Hopper Cancellation Policy 2026: How to Cancel Flights & Get Refunds

Hopper provides a user-friendly platform for booking flights in the United States, and understanding its cancellation policy in 2026 is essential for travelers. While Hopper makes the booking process simple, flight cancellations are subject to the rules of the airline associated with your reservation. Hopper acts as a booking agent, which means it facilitates the reservation, but the airline determines the actual cancellation fees and refund eligibility.

To cancel a flight booked through Hopper, users can access their trip details within the mobile app or website. Once the booking is located, the platform provides instructions for initiating a cancellation and highlights any applicable fees or restrictions based on the airline's policy.

Many US-based airlines allow free cancellation within 24 hours of purchase if the booking was made at least seven days prior to departure, but this can vary depending on the carrier and fare class. Hopper also supports refundable and non-refundable tickets, giving travelers different options for cancellation.

Refundable tickets usually allow travelers to receive a full refund to their original payment method after cancellation, though processing times may vary. Non-refundable tickets often offer travel credits instead of cash refunds, which can be used for future reservations with the same airline.

These credits provide flexibility for travelers in the US who need to adjust their plans without losing the value of their original ticket. To ensure a smooth cancellation process, US travelers should check the confirmation email received from Hopper at the time of booking. This email contains the airline name, flight details, and a confirmation code, which can be used on the airline's website for additional cancellation or refund information.

Hopper also offers customer support for US users who need guidance on cancellations or refund procedures. The support team can provide step-by-step instructions and help clarify
